INQUIRE TO INSPIRE

Written by Ms. Lisa Clinch, Deputy Director of Personnel for AFLCMC and IPMA-HR Executive Board Member

As our period of social distancing stretches on, we are navigating daily living in uncertain times. The isolation and wide-spread anxiety can have significant impacts on our overall mental health. It is incredibly important to find effective ways to remain connected with friends, family, and co-workers while maintaining social distance. With more flexible working schedules, it can be hard to connect with a co-worker who you would normally see every day, so ensure that you communicate your availability to your co-workers to facilitate effective two-way communication. Ask your co-workers for their communication style preferences and share yours- we have a variety of communication tools at our disposal. Some people may prefer things in writing and will utilize emails and SharePoint; others may prefer verbal communication and opt for phone calls; and other still may prefer utilizing Zoom for verbal and visual communication. Beyond using these tools simply to accomplish tasks, focus on maintaining your personal connection with friends and co-workers- call someone to give them kudos on a job well done, share a picture with your team of the cat sleeping by your laptop, or even keep your daily coffee break – simply plan to call or video chat with a cup in hand at the time your group would normally head to the break room or coffee shop. These small moments are crucial to remind us that through this troubling time, we are not alone.
